Ethics

Ethics are at the root of all service and professional practices - and guide our decisions and actions on a daily basis. In fact, they are at the root of much of our human behavior and have therefore been studied in many different ways and applications as we struggle to "do the right thing".

Since we all have our own ideas about what is right and what is wrong - and methods to tell the difference - it is imperative to ground ourselves in principles that guide our professional decision making to protect the public, the practitioner and the profession we represent. This workshop will explore many of the ethical principles that guide this thinking and help the participant explore and articulate approaches to solving ethical dilemmas.

Objectives: At the conclusion of the program the participant will be able to:

- Increase self-awareness and develop an ability to articulate the interplay of personal values and professional behavior
- Relate the different approaches of several theories of ethics - and how to apply these to ethical dilemma examples
- Identify professional standards of practice that illuminate the relationship between professional ethics, law and issues of confidentiality and boundaries
